tional value. They have been anxious to get the game out in time for Black History Month (February), and I have the feeling they are rushing a little," he said.

Dixon, however, criticized Butler's assessment as that of a "burgeois black who's already on top" and said the game is "at least the nucleus" of a method to help youngsters find out important things that are not taught in schools.

"This game gives young blacks, and young whites as well, a chance to recognize the hidden contributions of black people to the overall value of the United States," Dixon said.

"Like the Chinese say, 'A journey of 1,000 miles begins with the first step.' This is the first step. Later, there will be the opportunity to revise the questions," he said.

The questions are arranged in four categories — sports, music and arts, lifestyles and history. Each player is dealt seven cards, each of which has three questions, two from one category and one from any category.

The categories, but not the questions and answers, are visible to all the players, and each bids on the number of questions he thinks he can answer during a hand.

"The name of the game comes from the way it is played. If you don't make your bid, then you have to get up and leave your seat. It can also be taken to mean, 'Get out of your lethargy and learn something,'" Olds said.

Alexis Herman, of the Washington marketing firm Green Herman Associates, began marketing the game in November and by the end of December it had sold 5,000 copies in test markets.

Eventually the $29.95 game will be available through major retail chains.

Streisand video with all-star cast headed for theaters

© 1985, Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — Barbra Streisand is headed to the big screen for the first time since Yentl, but in a small way.

Negotiations are almost concluded for a national theatrical run of Streisand's Emotion video from her recent album of the same name. The 5½-minute video could be playing in several hundred theaters by mid-February.

Other videos have played theaters, but none with a cast like this one. Streisand plays a frustrated wife; Roger Daltry plays her husband and Mikhail Baryshnikov appears as one of her fantasy lovers. Richard Baskin, Streisand's frequent companion of late, directed.

As for feature film plans, Streisand's Barwood Productions set up shop at Warner Bros. in early '84 and has been veiled in secrecy ever since. Musical, dramatic and comedic projects are in development; most recently, Streisand is said to be close to commiting to a "socially relevant comedy about a contemporary woman and her relationships."
